According to CNN.com, high salaries in the oil industry are driven by the growing demand for workers due to oil boom in the United States, Brazil and other regions. Whats more, many drillers are retiring - a phenomenon known in the industry as great crew change, which is likely only to accelerate in the next decade. This is good news if you are looking for or considering to work on the platform. Who has the best chance of getting a job? The oil industry is made up of people just like you - looking for a stable job, a chance to explore the world and extremely well-paid international career. Its a fact that your previous experience will be an advantage, but its lack absolutely does not exclude you. Drilling companies employ people from various fields, from cleaners, painters, electricians, welders, to doctors, office workers and cooks. Even a person who seemingly has no relevant experience can get a job there, provided that he or she demonstrates determination, enthusiasm and meets health requirements. In this case you will have to start from the lowest level, for example cleaner, cook assistant and a painter. But what is very important, most companies only employ people from the lowest level to then promote them to higher positions. A lot of employers have internal training programs to assist in the promotion. This personnel policy has a purpose of familiarizing employees with work at sea and the progressive development of their competences.
